Trump leans on military for Iran, Ukraine diplomacy

WASHINGTON

US President Donald Trump has taken the unusual step of tapping military leaders for high-level diplomacy, sending the top US commander in the Middle East to talks over Iran's nuclear programme and positioning the Army secretary as a key negotiator on ending the Russia-Ukraine war.

Adm. Brad Cooper, head of US Central Command, for the first time joined indirect US-Iran talks Friday in Oman, appearing in his dress uniform as a reminder of the American buildup of military might in the region. As Army Secretary Dan Driscoll reprised his role at Russia-Ukraine talks this week, he worked to keep the conversation going with Ukrainian officials in the downtime between sessions, according to a person familiar with the negotiations who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss the sensitive talks.

With special envoy Steve Witkoff and Trump's son-in-law Jared Kushner balancing both sets of thorny negotiations, the choice to bring in military leaders — whether for their expertise, connections or to signal potential tougher options — reflects how the Republican administration has upended traditional US foreign policy and diplomacy. Elisa Ewers, who served in national security positions in the George W Bush and Obama administrations, said placing active-duty military leaders like Cooper in diplomatic roles shows how the Trump administration has devalued skilled diplomats and the tools of diplomacy in favor of an overreliance on the military to try to solve foreign policy challenges.

"It often takes an enormous amount of time, investment and hard work to get to the point where you can say diplomacy has succeeded," said Ewers, now a Middle East scholar at the Center for a New American Security, quoting the idiom that "not every nail needs a hammer." But Eliot Cohen, who served as counselor of the State Department in the George W. Bush administration, noted how American generals were involved in arms control talks with the Soviet Union during the Cold War. AP

Iran signals readiness to resume US talks

PARIS: Iran's Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi said Tehran hopes to resume nuclear talks with the United States soon after "a good start" in Oman, though trust will take time. He ruled out negotiating Iran's missile programme and warned Iran would target US bases if attacked. Araghchi noted a rare handshake with US officials despite indirect talks. President Donald Trump called the discussions "very good" and promised another round, even as Washington imposed new tariffs and sanctions.
